A MARY TOWNSEND OF THE BATTLE FIELD. The following is an extract of a private letter from the mother of the 14th Illinois. It is dated March 10

Let me relate to you a touching incident, that will doubtless strike you as a high tragedy. At the battle of Jivroche, when the conflict was raging fiercest, upon advancing halfway between the contending forces, we saw a sweet little blue-eyed baby little thing, as it were, hugging the cold earth its only friend—the little tear on its cheek.

That nature made it weep, turned alarmed, and the awful confusion of the awful battle with the masses of Jacob's back about it and a crowding close upon it, you doubtless, yet unhurt, it seemed as if I lay at merciful safety to say to me. My help and innocence appealed to God and he served me in the midst of this rushing on if you will make your complaint to heaven, God will answer you in his blood.

Who would suppose that in the wild fierce life of the Hatchue, where the dead was trampled on, the dead, and the crows eat the air with a noisy, a great army would pause in the midst of the conflict to save a harmless, a helpless old? Let the brave 194b, that never yet been killed in battle, did pause and an officer of the regiment ordered our little baby to be carried

The next day after the battle our baby was brought before the 14th, and unanimously adopted 'child of the regiment.' Three or four days later, strange as it may seem, a poor, frail, emaciated, poverty pinched mother came searching the battle-field in quest of her child, saying if you can the wild exclamations of thanksgiving that burst from that poor woman

"Our little baby—
Little blue eyes laughing hair

Don't undertake to kiss a furious woman
It's not a smack in a storm

A man's money seldom grows more than his Just as his love of it.

Why is a dull and pleasurable man like an unloaded gun?—Because he is a smooth bore

Nature opposes all attempts at taking wisdom and anythink alike

One of our contemporaries, speaking of high noon, asks "what will advance next?" Well, the army, he hopes, if they can get vegetables enough—a scholarly joke

We are told to have hope and trust but what's to follow to do when he can no longer get y trust

He that blows the coals in quarrels be has thing to do with, has no right to complain if spark fly in his face.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 2, 1865

The conservatives think that if the President does not find the proclamation to answer his expectations, he will abandon it and adopt the order State policy, but the number who think this is small.

WATSON VIGOROUSLY ADMITTED The following

"All speculation" as to the President's action on the bill for the admission of Western Virginia into the Union has now ended, the news having been overruled, on Monday, that he had not yet decided on the bill, that he had approved and signed the bill on Wednesday night, and it is therefore a law.
